

March 2026 Acquisitions

North America accounted for the largest number of acquisitions (by target location), with 11 transactions representing 45.8% of all recorded acquisitions. Europe followed with 10 acquisitions (41.7%), while Oceania recorded 2 acquisitions (8.3%). In terms of target industry sectors, Transportation was the most active sector with 8 transactions (33.3%). This was followed by Logistics with 4 acquisitions (16.7%). Freight Forwarding, Last Mile, Software, and Temperature Controlled Logistics each recorded 3 acquisitions (12.5%), indicating a relatively balanced level of activity across these segments.

Acquisition of WWEX Group by Thoma Bravo

Thoma Bravo's acquisition of WWEX Group and planned combination with Auctane creates an interesting tech-enabled logistics platform that bridges freight execution and shipping software across parcel, LTL, and global markets. The transaction brings together WWEX's scaled freight brokerage and transportation services with Auctane's shipping technology, creating an integrated platform with the potential to unify software, data, and execution in an interesting fashion.

Strategically, the deal reflects a continued push toward convergence between logistics services and logistics software. WWEX adds meaningful scale, customer relationships, and operational freight expertise, while Auctane contributes a technology layer that can automate shipment selection, improve visibility, and enable smarter decision-making across modes. In combining the two, Thoma Bravo is effectively positioning the platform around a modern tech-enabled operating model.

Redwood Logistics's Acquisition of EELCO

The southern border is no longer a logistics afterthought. With Mexico having overtaken China as the U.S.'s largest trading partner and over $100 billion invested in Mexican manufacturing over the past five years, cross-border trade volumes have surged. But so has the complexity of moving goods across it.

Section 232 tariffs, UFLPA enforcement, anti-dumping duties, and tightening HTS scrutiny have turned customs from a back-office function into a boardroom priority. What operators like EELCO bring is genuinely difficult to replicate: decades of CBP and ANAM relationships, the ability to pivot quickly as regulations shift, FTZ-enabled warehousing to actively manage tariff spend, and a physical presence on both sides of the border. In an environment where a delayed release at the bridge can trigger expedited freight, empty repositioning, and cascading supply chain costs, that expertise carries real strategic value.

Before this deal, Redwood, one of North America's leading 4PL providers managing over 40,000 annual cross-border shipments across 300-plus carrier partners, was outsourcing its southern border customs brokerage to third parties. That left a gap in control, data integration, and margin at the most compliance-sensitive point in the cross-border journey. EELCO closes it.

There is an old saying in logistics: you date your forwarder, but you marry your customs broker. By bringing brokerage in-house, Redwood transforms an already sticky customer relationship into one that is structurally harder to displace, while eliminating the coordination friction that erodes margin at the border. It also unlocks a significant cross-sell opportunity into EELCO's base of 114,000-plus annual customs transactions.

But the most powerful and underappreciated unlock is data. The more the supply chain Redwood owns and executes, the richer and more complete its view of each customer's operation becomes. That depth of insight is what allows a 4PL to move beyond service provision into genuine supply chain consultancy, identifying inefficiencies, optimizing costs, and anticipating risks in ways that a provider touching only part of the chain simply cannot. Every additional capability brought in-house compounds that advantage. That is what makes this acquisition about far more than customs brokerage. Add EELCO's 250,000 sq ft FTZ-enabled warehouse sitting directly on Interstate 35 and the World Trade Bridge, and Redwood can now offer customers a genuinely integrated solution at the busiest US/MX port: freight management, customs clearance, FTZ warehousing, and compliance all under one roof.

Analysis of Austria Post's stake in eushipments.com

Austrian Post's acquisition of a 70% stake in euShipments.com for around €55 million represents a targeted move to strengthen its position in cross-border e-commerce logistics in Southeast and Eastern Europe, a region with strong online retail growth and fragmented logistics infrastructure. The acquisition gives Austrian Post access to a fully integrated e-commerce logistics platform that provides fulfilment, cross-border delivery, returns management, and payment solutions to more than 1,300 online retailers across Europe. This aligns with Austrian Post's ambition to become a leading e-commerce logistics partner across Central and Eastern Europe and Türkiye under its LEAD 2030 strategy.
